The Reese House is a two-and-a-half story, rusticated concrete block foursquare, which appears to have been erected between 1920 and 1930. The house has been minimally altered through modernization of the fenestration.

House (1920-1930)

The Reese House is a two-and-a-half story, rusticated concrete block foursquare, two bays by two bays with an asphalt shingle, hipped roof and dormers on the north and south elevations. Fenestration is regular, six-over-six sash, except on the principal [north] facade where a modern bay window has been installed on the first story. An open porch with rounded columns on block piers, traverses the north facade.

A shallow wall extension is evident on the east elevation and a screen enclosed porch has been constructed on the south elevation. A small frame tool shed is affixed to the west elevation.
